Energy and infrastructure consulting firm expands into Western Australia

Marchment Hill Consulting announces the opening of its Perth office

Marchment Hill Consulting is opening an office in Perth, and has appointed Ben Connor as Managing Consultant to lead its Western Australian operations.

With the vibrant local economy promising so much for the citizens and businesses of Western Australia, Marchment Hill sees a pressing need to respond effectively to emerging industry issues such as infrastructure constraints, regional development requirements and primary energy security. Marchment Hill is committed to working with Western Australian businesses to answer their most important and pressing challenges.

"The opening of our WA office in Perth is an important milestone for our business," said Neil Gibbs, Founder and Managing Principal of Marchment Hill Consulting. "We've worked in Perth on many occasions throughout our history, and will now do so with a dedicated, locally based group of experts."

Marchment Hill Consulting have historically hired staff out of the Western Australian industry for the experience and insights they bring, and will continue to do so as it expands its local team. Recent WA appointments include mining expert Randall Brewer, and electricity expert Ed Wilcox.

Neil Gibbs stated, "Ben Connor, who has been with Marchment Hill Consulting since its establishment, has accepted the offer to lead our new office. Ben's background in the local market includes working with businesses such as Western Power, Synergy and the Office of Energy."

Ben Connor is delighted that the opportunity arose to lead the company's Western Australian office. "At our inception, we spent a lot of our time in the WA electricity industry. We've now grown to serve the electricity, gas, water and mining industries, and Western Australia remains integral to our plans. We believe that our tight industry focus, our track record and our demonstrated commitment through a permanent presence here will see us succeed in WA."
